

Advanced Everest Basecamp Trek

Trip Overview

The highest summit of the planet is situated on the border between Tibet(an autonomous region of China) and Nepal, the North side belongs to China while the South side belongs to Nepal. Tibet Everest Advanced Base Camp Trek is one of the greatest challenging journeys and the highest trekking route on the planet which is the most fascinating destination for tourists from all over the world. The Everest advanced base camp is situated at an elevation of 6500m which is the same elevation as Camp Two from the south side of Everest and much higher than trekking peaks in Nepal as Island Peak, Mera Peak, and Lobuche East which can be reached without any ice axe, crampons and mountaineering skills. Those who are in good shape, and properly acclimatized can easily do this trip. This trek starts from Kathmandu by flight to Lhasa with a spectacular flight over the snow-capped Himalayan range. Spending 2 days in Lhasa for exploration of some cultural, and historical spots such as Potala palace, Norbulinkha temple, Jorkhang Square, Sera and Drepung monasteries and proper acclimatization, Trip ahead towards Shigatse and finally to Tingri, from where the actual trip begins. In between that we never miss visiting the massive Tashilhunpo Monastery, Khumbum Stupa, and Phalkot Monastery. Continue walking for five days from Tingri and take us to Everest Basecamp. After resting in Basecamp and proper acclimatization with an exploration of majestic views of the mountain, the trip heads toward the Advanced Basecamp close to the summit of Everest.
