

Everest Basecamp & Nirekha Peak

Trip Overview

Nirekha Peak climbing is a pronounced summit that lies on the border of the Himalayan range in the Khumbu region. Nirekha Peak is moderately situated in the range of Lobuche Peak and to the east of Cho-La Col quite a distance high from the Cho-La Pass. The peak was recently opened by the Nepal Mountaineering Association and categorized in the list of grade “A” among the trekking peaks. The peak summit needs some technical skills in mount climbing. Only the experienced climber should attempt to conquer this peak. Nirekha Peak offers two routes. One route leads from Kanchung Base Camp and others from the Lake Base Camp. The Khanchung route is short and easier. Our itinerary is based on the Khanchung trail. We trace via Glacier to the Cho La Col which is quite normal, easy, and has few gorges.

The scale of our trail is mostly ice and snow. The trail despite having small altitude differences requires good acclimatization. The summit appeals to one of the best views of the Himalayan region. The top of the peak grants the outstanding opportunity to view several top mountains like Mt. Everest (8848 meters), Mt. Nuptse (7,861 meters), Mt. Lhotse (8,516 meters / 27,940 ft), Mt. Cho Oyu (8,188 meters / 26,864 ft.) above sea level., and much other adjoining Himalayan ranges. Nirekha Peak at the elevation of 6159 meters lies in the Mahalangur region in the deep of the Himalayas. It is close to the Tibetan border and concealed among the famous gigantic mountains like Everest, Cholatse, and Cho Oyu.

The western climbers were recently permitted to climb this peak. The design of this peak is straightforward. We require equipment like ice-ax, fixed rope sections, and crampons. This peak is favorable to trekkers or climbers who have a good physical conditions with some experience in climbing peaks. The ideal period for the Nirekha peak climb is Autumn and Spring.
